PREFACE

Four years have elapsed since the previous edition. For this new edition it was necessary to wait until the transitional period of the Treaty of Lisbon came to an end on 1 December 2014 and the first subsequent experiences could be incorporated. It has been a great pleasure to see that the second edition is frequently used, both in courses on European criminal law and cooperation in criminal matters at various universities and training schools for the judiciary, and in academic writings. I was honoured that it was translated into Romanian in 2014. I thank the Soros-Foundation for the generous support to carry out the translation.

This third edition has kept the main features of the second. However, some important changes must be mentioned. A new Chapter 4 on the interpretation of the law better reflects the particularities of how to interpret European criminal law in a national setting. Elaborate revisions also took place in the chapter on criminal procedure, now Chapter 6. This was especially necessary in view of defence directives that have been adopted in recent years. They change the nature of criminal procedure.

The book remains unique in the wealth of court decisions and legal instruments it covers. It is my ambition to make European Criminal Law an invaluable source for every European and criminal lawyer (whether practitioner, academic or student). This third updated and extended edition fully covers all recent developments up to and including 1 October 2015.

I am honoured with the apt feedback I received from Christina Peristeridou, almost on a 24/7 basis, as well as from her managing the Annex on the Literature on European Criminal Law in the Member States. I am most grateful to Hannah Brodersen, Miguel João de Almeida Costa, Johannes Keiler, Christina Peristeridou and Charlotte Röber for their comments on Chapter 10, which ought to be the icing on the cake. It is great to see the research group on European Criminal Law functioning in practice.

I am most grateful to Hans Kluwer and Ann-Christin Maak for their patience and confidence that significantly contributed to the third edition of this work. Last, but not least, I thank Rebecca Pound for her time and effort in editing the manuscript.

I would appreciate any comments and observations, and would be happy to try and answer any questions that any reader might have (andre.klip@maastrichtuniversity.nl).
