ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The idea for this Handbook grew out of a collaboration between the four co-editors when we met in London in March 2017, and then in Leiden in October 2017. We agreed to develop an international comparative project based on our shared research interest in child participation in family law contexts. The result of our initiative is this Handbook which includes 17 country chapters, preceded by several chapters on pedagogical and psychological perspectives, human and children's rights standards and private international law in the context of child participation, and which culminates in a comparative analysis chapter. It has become clear that children are now taken more seriously in family law proceedings, but more work is still necessary to fully respect children's right to participate in these contexts.

We would like to express our gratitude in the context of writing this Handbook. First of all, this Handbook was made possible through the support of Intersentia Ltd in response to our project proposal. We would particularly like to thank Ann-Christin Maak-Scherpe, Publisher and General Manager, and Rebecca Moffat, Editor, for their invaluable expertise and collegiality.

We also wish to express our sincere appreciation to all the child and family law experts who contributed to the Handbook. They willingly shared their knowledge and experience of the ways in which children's participation rights are given effect globally or in family law proceedings in their specific jurisdictions.

We are most grateful to Charlotte Mol for her comparative analysis chapter, as it was a complex task to thematise the diverse range of information provided in the 17 national perspectives chapters.

We would also like to thank the Organising Committee of the Commission on European Family Law (CEFL) for accepting this Handbook into the European Family Law Series.

Finally, we would like to thank our universities for their support as we undertook this project: Utrecht University, University of Westminster, University of Otago and Leiden University.

We hope that our Handbook inspires all those who are interested in child participation in the family justice system. In addition, we would like to think that the handbook stimulates further reflection about how best to embed children's right to participation in family law contexts and to initiate more research on this important topic.
