ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I want to thank the many people who made this book possible, including those I worked with at InternetNZ and the Association for Progressive Communications. When I joined InternetNZ in 2007, I thought I was joining a committee, but I found a community, a network, and a bunch of incredible mentors and new friends. Particular thanks to Jordan Carter, Ellen Strickland, Jamie Baddeley, Debbie Monahan, Richard Curry and Frank March. When I joined the Association for Progressive Communications in 2011, I took a job, but I found a purpose and lifetime inspiration. Thanks to all of the APC Network members and staff, in particular, Anriette Esterhuysen, Valeria Betancourt, Chat Garcia Ramilo and Karen Banks. With these organisations, I was able to experience the intellectual exhilaration of learning about the Internet, and the stress, pain, exhaustion, self-doubt and laughter of those who care about the Internet and human rights. This book is a tribute to everyone I worked with, and is dedicated to our continued shared struggle.

I am grateful to those who supported the initial idea for this book, including Anriette Esterhuysen, Dr Judy McGregor, Dr Marilyn Waring, Jane Foster, Alistair Farr, Dr Bill Germano, and my University of Otago colleagues John Zerilli, James Maclaurin, Alistair Knott, and Colin Gavaghan. Thanks to Jessica Palmer, Dean of the Law School at the University of Otago, for appointing me as a Research Affiliate as I commenced writing.

I am especially grateful to Dr Jeanne Snelling, my academic mentor, for her encouragement to write this book, her expertise in regulatory approaches to new technologies, and for providing a much-needed writing retreat. I am indebted to my brother, Richard Liddicoat, for reviewing drafts, talking me through the tough patches, and being a kind and critical muse. Thanks also to Rhian Gallagher, Marianne Quinn, and Susan Iversen of Karo Data Management, and to all the family, colleagues and friends who listened and encouraged me over emails, online meetings, cups of coffee, lunches, walks and talks – you know who you are. I am also grateful to all those at Intersentia, in particular Ann-Christin Maak-Scherpe, for kind and professional assistance, and Rebecca Moffat – an amazing editor.

Finally, thanks to my partner, Jo Fox, for her unwavering support: without you, my human rights work and this book would not have been possible.
